Markets Cool as Investors Digest a Changing Landscape

Joe Shearrer, CPFA® is Vice President and Wealth Advisor at Fervent Wealth Management.

This winter has been anything but predictable. In our area, temperatures have swung from the 70s one day to brisk 30s the next, reminding us how quickly conditions can change. Financial markets have shown similar swings recently, keeping investors alert even as overall trends remain intact.

After beginning the year at near record levels, U.S. stock markets have begun to move with greater caution. Major indexes, including the Dow Jones Industrial Average, S&P 500 and Nasdaq Composite, have pulled back modestly from recent highs as investors digest a steady flow of new information. Rather than signaling a sudden shift in sentiment, the move reflects a pause as markets reassess expectations.

At the center of that reassessment is earnings season. Early reports, particularly from large financial institutions, have painted a mixed picture. Some companies have delivered solid profits, while others have highlighted slower revenue growth, higher borrowing costs and a more competitive business environment. This has led to uneven performance across sectors and highlights that companies are feeling the economy differently.

Economic data has added another layer of complexity. Recent inflation readings suggest price pressures have moderated from prior peaks, but inflation remains above the Federal Reserve's long-term target. As a result, investors are adjusting to the possibility that interest rates may stay elevated longer than previously expected. That backdrop has influenced both stock valuations and bond yields, contributing to increased market sensitivity around new data releases.

Global developments have also played a role. Ongoing geopolitical tensions have encouraged some investors to adopt a more defensive posture, supporting demand for assets, such as gold, and contributing to volatility in energy markets. These shifts appear to reflect caution rather than panic, but they highlight how external events can quickly influence market behavior.

Technology stocks, which have driven much of the market's gains in recent years, have shown signs of fatigue as well. Concerns around valuations, regulation, and the pace of future growth have led investors to be more selective, even as long-term confidence in innovation remains intact.

Despite recent pullbacks, the broader picture suggests rotation rather than retreat. Some defensive sectors have held up well, indicating that investors are repositioning portfolios rather than stepping away from the market altogether.

Looking ahead, attention will remain focused on corporate earnings, inflation trends and labor-market data. With markets still trading near historic levels, periods of volatility are likely as investors balance optimism about long-term growth with caution around short-term risks.

Just as most of us wouldn't overhaul our plans based on a single warm or cold day, investors are often best served by maintaining perspective during market swings. Staying disciplined and focused on long-term goals has historically mattered more than reacting to short term shifts in market conditions.

Have a blessed week!

Kansas' Most Unpopular Tax? Sales/Transaction Tax Is So Disliked

- Survey of 3,022 respondents.
- Sales/Transaction Tax was followed by property tax + vehicle registration tax as the most despised among Kansans.
- Infographic showing the most hated taxes in each state.

Americans may joke that only death and taxes are certain, but which taxes do they hate the most? 5StarLoans.com carried out a poll of 3,044 respondents, which aimed to uncover the most despised tax in every state - from sky-high property taxes, to steep sales taxes, to the polarizing “death tax”.

The 3 most hated taxes in The Sunflower State are:

#1 Sales / Transaction Tax - Utterly Despised.

In Kansas, the sales tax feels like a second shadow — always there, quietly following you from checkout counter to gas pump. With one of the highest combined rates in the nation, for families balancing tight budgets, it's a tax that hits hardest where it hurts most. The grocery aisle, in particular, is ground zero for frustration. While state sales taxes are no longer charged on groceries, often local city and county taxes still apply, turning weekly food shopping into a recurring reminder of fiscal policy gone stale.

#2 Property Tax - Pretty Much Universally Hated.

Kansans hate property tax because it's the bill that never really goes away. Even after the mortgage is paid, homeowners know they're still renting from the government in a sense.

#3 Vehicle Registration Tax - Loathed on Principle Alone.

Few taxes feel as redundant as the annual vehicle registration fee. Kansans dislike paying for something they already own, and the ritual of renewal can feel more like rent than responsibility. Whether called a tag fee, ad valorem, or personal property tax, it's a recurring reminder that ownership always comes with strings attached.

After revealing which taxes

Kansans despise most, 5StarLoans.com decided to look beyond tax season and into the daily emotions tied to money, credit, and borrowing.

The findings reveal a nation that's financially stretched, emotionally candid, and cautiously optimistic about its financial future.

When You Think of Taking Out a Loan...

For most Kansans, borrowing isn't a source of relief - it's a source of anxiety.

- 54% said their first emotion is stress, far outweighing every other feeling.

- 13% described hope, suggesting some still see loans as a fresh start.

- Only 10% said relief, and 11% admitted to shame, proving that while attitudes toward debt are softening, they're far from neutral.

Credit Scores: A Call for Fairer Rules

If there's one thing that unites Americans, it's frustration with how credit scores are built — and how long bad credit follows them.

- 32% want to shorten how long negative marks last.

- 27% think on-time rent and utility payments should count more.

- 21% say the system should be free and transparent.

- 20% want medical debt removed entirely.

Together, the responses show a desire for credit scoring that rewards responsibility rather than penalizes past mistakes — a system based on progress, not punishment.

Financial Regrets They Can't Shake

When asked about their biggest money mistakes, one answer towered over the rest: not saving soon enough.

- 48% regret not starting to save earlier.

- 29% regret credit card debt.

- 12% regret missing loan payments.

- 11% regret co-signing for someone else.

Would You Co-Sign for a Friend?

Despite good intentions, generosity has its limits:

- 77% said they would refuse to co-sign a loan.

- Only 23% said they would take the risk.

What's Keeping Kansans Up at Night

When it comes to day-to-day financial stress, housing costs remain the heaviest weight on the national wallet.

- 31% said rent or mortgage payments are their biggest source of pressure.

- 24% named credit card debt.

- 22% pointed to taxes — perhaps unsurprising, given the nation's fiscal frustrations.

- 14% said medical bills.

- 9% cited personal loans.
